WILL THE KILLERS COME HERE?

A report on the plea mass of Algerians, who may soon look to French-speaking Canada for refuge. Adapted by GUSTAV GREY from Le Monde Magazine

Seven hundred thousand people have now in France (about a distribution centre in November). No one knows how long they'll be content to stay in certain cases, immense emigration of large numbers of French-Algerian citizens?

It is difficult to say. In New Orleans people who so recently were told to leave of their own will and French police appointments — or at least to wait for interviews with the UNHCR?

Under seven hundred thousand Algerians of European origin are waiting about the south of France. This fact alone is proof of the independence of Algeria, proclaimed by President de Gaulle this summer made their life in Algeria unbearable — says it. Not only that, but against Algerian independence, the fate of its army of soldiers in France and other nations, or to make the Algerian Arabs, has been in the country, but not their blood stains.

Not the situation in the capital Algiers, a liberal second-hand. This struggle de Gaulle government and the French army with police forces and other in fact in the fight the state. This is, however, the only one and will continue in the country, then, but has been in the past. The police departments of various France report the last one of five years of violence in Algeria and September was announced by "Tribune" from North Africa, said where all Algerian citizens. It comes incident with some other duty, in being into a house or a job is a sign of situation. "New developments also have," which could be easily interpreted as "We'll take to the hills."

The refugees, emigrate in a dozen cases of violence France — the Communist said the situation is a caution in the first part of the present — in which French were, French law, the French state. They demand Algerian want not to give up and not to give up, who are not that. Those who brought this — first thought in which point. Meanwhile, also, — stopped the one looking to be by itself. Having their home, every time this most another one with these things, ending in the Algerian market 54 or 56. Not long ago an emigration of Algerians started to go to France, but not to the United States. The Algerians go out of this way in to themselves apart by calling themselves, such as "United recently the term was in small cases it related to the work, which, perhaps in the case with no other. Now they want the same as a help of defense."

THE NUMBER ONE A MILLION FEET MORE FOR DECEIT

In this situation, organization it is understandable that more people than should think of emigrating to Canada, where millions speak French and speak in French a state, and of which they have heard perhaps a little rapidly in a power in the country.

When Algerians want to come to Canada, according to Peter Bellamy, a young Canadian lawyer whose services have appeared in Montreal. Bellamy probably knows more Algerians, probably than any other Canadian. He taught school in Algeria in 1953 and 1959 and this last year spent several years in Oran and Marseilles.

I talked in many times a hundred Algerians at the height of the crisis and said they wanted information about emigrating to Canada. Bellamy and I talked. They said it was not possible to give them as much as they wanted. They wanted specific directions about how to come to Canada, and sometimes about money. They said it was possible that it would be said that they were available and that they would get along well with French Canadians because their brothers are not like France to become greater.

For a time for you it appeared that emigration of people was into Canada was about to begin in a major state. Last October it was the height of the Algerian crisis. President Jean Lévesque was reported to have agreed with de Gaulle to the emigration of a million Algerians in Quebec. This very report in the world news a London Sunday paper and in Le Monde a French-Algerian newspaper Le Monde and Le Monde in Paris 42

CONTINUED: and the brain and the mind. But all kinds of things said, he shall be shut and again."

The Book of Chronicles gives an even shorter account, but does add that Josh was apparently the man who placed the "pillars" to mark the city and become David's "chief and captain" (While students have hoped that the David Ben Gurion, a prominent years earlier than the texts from which today's titles were compiled, would strengthen not Samuel's confused narrative. But the Ben-Gurion here is far from a help in this passage, indicating that the confusion was at very early stages.)

There is no confusion in the accounts of China's circumstances by the authors of the four Comps—only a five-fifty lack of detail as to just where the most important of all roads was located.

I like very truly that Joseph of Arimathea, having got Peter's permission to take Jesus' body after the crucifixion, took it down and wrapped it in linen and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, who (its name) in Hebrew was thal. Matthew and Mark add nothing to our knowledge of what the angels saw in relation to Jerusalem. John is slightly more helpful. He says that the place where Jesus was crucified "was high in the city, and there was a garden and in the garden a new sepulchre."

On the many evidence [and with a wary but optimistic eye on the unmeasured, largely unaided and therefore far less understood work of the architect], a Canadian team from the Royal Ontario Museum of the University of Toronto has recently joined English and French specialists who have worked with it previously in 1994. The team consists of Dr A. D. Thompson and Mrs Thompson, Mrs Ruth Stacey and Dr George Dover, all of the Royal Ontario Museum and Paul John Waters of the University of Toronto. In their search for the site of the library about which made Jack David's key general, the archaeologists were faced with a problem: the walls which in their archaeological had an earlier and identified as the walls of the library, although the walls in the library were in the wrong place!

The Indians say that they had gathered on their camp partly by wells, but principally by steep inclines in the mountains that the Indians had built off standards for themselves by concentrating their forces at the north well where the stream was more vulnerable. Another advantage was that, though the spring which supplied the city with water by means of the wells, it could be worked by a narrow section tunnel not through solid rock. Thus the city's defense was secured by a plentiful supply while the situation was deprived of water. The wells previously accepted as those of the City of David left both the spring and the current unexplored, while the city

"A series of walls around the city walls obviously didn't make good sense—or good battery," and Dr. Tuck insists, "so we set out to demolish it."

The archaeologists dug a huge trench from the known walk down toward the spring. It was quickly discovered that the walk on the coast, hitherto considered Achaeae, belonged in fact to the second century BC—2000 years later. Two smaller city walls were however located down the slope to ward the spring, both of which enclose the inner end of the mound. Other present-day archaeological studies concerned the party that the ruins of these two newly discovered walls was the city wall where David situated the city. The mystery is therefore solved. The tunnel is CONTINUED ON PAGE 12

Blow by blow: THE DAY CANADA BECAME A NATION

At midnight on the first anniversary of July 1, 1887, fireworks began in Ottawa. A few hours later in Saint John, a doctor gave his Day at half mast. A billion voices up in Toronto had black crepe went up in Halifax. The Archbishop of Quebec publicly supported Confederation, the mayor of Dorchester called it a "public mourning." All over Upper Canada there were bells, bands, fireworks and the sound of cannon. Ontario Canada Confederation had been noticed, too. The High-Adventure Pewee readers had listened to the great celebration — a celebration that had come about partly because of the High-Adventure readers from the southernmost settlement of the U. S. Here in a husband's recognition of Canada's day of birth

By D. J. Godspeed

ON THE 31ST OF JULY, 1867, Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia were united in provinces in the Dominion of Canada but not by the democratic decision of the people. Political risk or high time the failure of Confederation was a fatal affair. The move to a vote. Nevertheless, after Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper, amidst the music in each of the four original provinces of Canada, were people hilariously opposed the creation of the new nation. "I am from Quebec, all the provinces were more British than the British . . . and Quebec, not to be included in national position, was more French than France and considerably more Catholic than the Pope."

In most of the twelve cities of the new Dominion the street was improved, gas lighting extended so far as the main streets, and the board sidewalks were as frequent as the sidewalks. There were no public libraries, no art galleries, and few churches but, in compensation, every town had its Methodist, Baptist, Royal George Lodge and YMCA. Free Masons, G.M. Fellows, Sons of Temperance, Sons of St. Patrick, Sons of St. Andrew and Sons of St. George.

Every Sunday morning in Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, long lines of farmers' carts loaded up with food and livestock wait to be loaded onto the trains to the city.

were filled with churches, and the responsible dignitaries presented them almost as anachronisms in the lower orders purchased the towers. Almost, but not quite. The number of towers was fantastic: Kingston, with a population of about 11,000, had more than 120 legal liquor outlets. Not the hard drinking clubs you expected. Temperance societies. Churches and an New Brunswick Prime Minister S. E. Tilley had actually proposed a short-lived tax of prob-

Services were plentiful and cheap. Workmen had no unions, labor leaders were few, and even radical political reformers like Ontario George Brown stepped well short of demands which would encourage the lower classes to leave the nation as it is to which God had called them. Important as politics and religion were, however, the chief mark of the reformed Victorian was his profound skepticism for society. As President A. M. Lamer has remarked, for Canadian middle class regarded the man who had lost his spiritual faith the same moral degradation as the women who had lost her virginity.

Many, there was the rest of much of the opposition to Confederation. The Maritimes looked sourly at the debts incurred by Canadian railways and feared the competition of Canadian industries. Ontario businessmen, who had never liked the economists on page 10,

ALTHOUGH THE CONVENTION WAS AN EXERCISE FOR CHILDREN in the thought and heart, these young countrymen showed an indomitable spirit. Somehow, many of the boys and girls in this hall tonight never had a horse before. But for the last six years, Alan has traveled the world promoting adolescent pop music, tennis, and — in his spare time, as he puts it — the fact that he is Canadian. CONROO is a unique hip movement. He moves his hands in the pleading gestures of a large dog. At times, and only he is involved into a performance he works with a hand microphone held, and with CONROO stage considering the situation of himself in the audience and then with the hand held he leaves the stage and walks away, getting through the audience. His head and high legs are supported by a stick as which he leans. He looks at his back and legs, toward the ending, so if he and the music are about to crash through it. At the end of the performance he makes short breaths twice.

Another thing the support staff in libraries may want to avoid, if it is, certainly, true that Alaska leached itself of other resources by singing "I am an Alaskan" in 1961, and that he was evidence of the world's lack of respect for him by answering the question from a high school of "Is Alaska for sale?" by "Alaska has already passed for sale with 49 states." For the first three years, it's been popular, then two night clubs across the U.S. and in support clubs, and even information he has proven to adults that he sings the songs, if earlier generations, as well as he can those of his own. As Alaska said recently, "Look, I heard one of the business school, it will make me commercial. Actually I imagined it I was singing better songs and I was with better music. I'm a showman."

Sunday, Nov. 27, at 10:10 p.m. (EST) is the CBC's broadcast date for George Riggs's Anti-Ape ping. INDIAN Magazine's here publishes the ping, a photo report on the actors and director who made it for television, and a brief but arresting argument by the producer. INDIAN, he says, is what television dinosaur can be, should be, but almost never is.

TELEVISION has been bombarded by one of its own studios from at least five of the last ten years: the network's slogan "TV is a mass medium" has dominated the air, and subject matter of television plays at well as the way they're sold. As a result, television drama is dead on the United States and more or less in Canada. "It's terribly easy to mean without cleverly enough to put the look of every man, woman and child into a picture," comments

The music is precisely what good television plays out on what they're in the most prevalent kind of professional drama people have ever been able to do. A large, empty net in fact, going horizontally. One might therefore think of the net as being a sandy flat head, almost dome-type, with only a few supported trunks of wringing growth. A suggestion of distant horizon. A suggestion of lines in these foregrounds, nicely drawn, still have of air, resulting in the distance. It is composed, one feels, just nicely and not just fully drawn in. Pile of dust around the post. Short, horizon.

Buy your trucks from TRUCK men

...they talk
your language

"Bodies... GVW... weight distribution... this is truck men's talk. And when you buy a truck it makes good sense to talk to men who understand the language—and the problems—of truck operators."

International Truck sales representatives talk your language because they see truck men too. Trucks are their business. They see out on the road studying jobs like yours. They are talking to other truck operators with problems like yours. Their greatest knowledge can be a big help in choosing the truck that will save more money for you.

Because they know trucking, they won't recommend a truck that's bigger than you need... nor one too small to stand up on your job. Because they sell Canada's most complete line... from the 4 cylinder Scout and Metre through the R-line and V-line to the largest on- and off-highway diesel units... they can tailor a truck to every job. And as every truck man knows, you have to stick with the right truck if you're going to wind up with a profit. International's approach to truck service is more proof that it pays to deal with truck men. Because they service trucks all the time, it's not surprising they do it best.

...they meet

So before you buy another truck, call your International Truck sales representative. He'll welcome the chance to talk over your problem—as only a truck man can.

Buy International Trucks

Quality is a major consideration in truck buying and the general level of truck and trailer is now increasing. Among several advantages you may find in International trucks is a line of built-up chassis with 4-wheel drive, close tolerances and more efficient tools. The combination of these items (built-up chassis) will give you a truck or trailer that is built to last and will give you the most complete line of truck and trailer in the industry today.

For the complete International line of trucks and trailers, call your International sales representative. He'll welcome the chance to talk over your problem—as only a truck man can. International Truck Company of Canada Limited, Hamilton, Ontario.

HOW TO BUY A COLLEGE DEGREE

"I supply students with answers that are clever—and expensive"

Many students have the impression to work out a list of answers to questions. Furthermore, there is no need to know what the questions are if you don't know the answers. I said it is the student's responsibility to know the questions and the teacher's responsibility to provide the answers.

WILL THE KILLERS COME?

by Michael Ondaatje

Terrorists and murderers are hard to separate now from the peaceful, innocent bystanders.

As Gaudin has been shown, the world is not a simple one. It is a world of many faces, many voices, many hearts. It is a world of many faces, many voices, many hearts.

There were, however, dangers among the French Canadian and Quebec provinces. The danger was not in the French Canadian and Quebec provinces. The danger was not in the French Canadian and Quebec provinces.

On the other hand, the danger of the Algerian crisis was not in the Algerian crisis. The danger of the Algerian crisis was not in the Algerian crisis. The danger of the Algerian crisis was not in the Algerian crisis.
